

Boundary Trail Project National Trails Day

6-2-2012

This is the parking area next to the trailhead. This is not a very good picture and it's bigger than it looks here. There should be plenty of room for 5 or 6 trailers/rigs easily. There are wide spots in the road where you could pull off to camp. Not pictured to the right is a rocked off area that we can park in as well. We might have to move a few of the rocks. The trail juts off to the left passed the retaining wall/load ramp.

A gradual climb a couple of miles passed the trail head brings you to a very nice little overlook. I believe it is overlooking Cambridge and/or Manns Creek.

Bionic Mike – the trail forks here. We take the right hand fork on Boundary trail. We stopped here for lunch before heading back to the truck.

There is an old FS cabin about 9 miles up the trail that might be fun to check out sometime.

This is the corduroy that we will be replacing. Mike will dig a drain ditch alongside the area we will be retrenching to help with erosion. We will be back-filling with sand and gravel instead of putting in the logs. It should make it nicer for horse traffic. We should have a motorized wheelbarrow for our use – or we could use five gallon buckets in our panniers to haul the gravel. The gravel will be taken locally from the creek close to the project. I offered to go in with Mike ahead of time and help with the prep work. Anybody else?

This bridge is just a few feet beyond the corduroy and crosses East Pine Creek. There are lots of cool places to ride from here. Right now the creek is really rolling – but by June it should be a mere trickle of its former self.

Happy National Trails Day!
